Peak Lenin 7134m

- Technically easy summit over 7000m
- The classic route via Razdelnaya Peak
- Third highest peak in the elite Snow Leopard Challenge

TREK OVERVIEW

Peak Lenin is the third highest mountain in the former Soviet Union and is situated in the Pamirs range of Kyrgyzstan. It is one of the most accessible of the world's 7000m peaks. The climb is non technical and truly Himalayan by proportion and yet relatively cost effective.

Situated in the Pamirs on the border between Kyrgyzstan and Tadjikistan, close to the borders with China, Lenin Peak is one of only five 7000 metre peaks in the former USSR. At 7134 metres it is the third highest, the others being Ismoli Somoni (Peak Communism) (7495m) and Korzhenevsky (7105m), both in the Pamirs, and Peak Pobeda (7,439m) and Khan Tengri (7010m) in the Tien Shan. To climb all five admits you to the elite group of Russian climbers known as Snow Leopards.

Base camp is quite idyllic, situated on a raised meadow of alpine flowers between two steep river valleys. From Base Camp we head over the Puteshestvinnikov Pass to the moraine of the Lenin Glacier which is ascended to reach camp 1 at 4200 m. We establish two or three further camps, crossing the subsidiary peak Razdelny. It is from here the views really open up towards Ismoli Somoni and the Hindu Kush.

The summit can be attempted in one long day, or a fourth camp can be placed at about 6400 metres. The summit at 7134 metres is crowned by a number of plaques, including one of Lenin himself. The views, as you would expect, are outstanding and stretch right across the Pamirs to Muztag Ata and Kongur in China and to the west the Karakoram.

Day 4 Transfer to Achik-Tash base camp (3700m)
We transfer from Osh to base camp via the Sary-Magol/Alai valley by cross-country six wheel truck (C,B,L,D)

Day 5 Acclimatisation on Petrovskogo Peak
To aid our acclimatisation we climb one of the mountains surrounding base camp and also use this day to refresh some of the skills we will need for climbing Peak Lenin. (C,B,L,D)

Day 6 - 18 Climbing Period
During the climbing period we will establish a further 3 camps with the possibility of a 4th camp at 6400m should it be required. (C,B,L,D)

BC - Camp 1
From BC we walk through the glade of Lukovaya Polyana (Wild Onion Meadow). As the plateau ends we follow the small steep path that climbs towards the Puteshestvinnikov Pass (4100m). We then descend again via the moraine to the right where the start of the climb up the Lenin Glacier begins. A further 5kms walking brings us to ABC (Camp 1) at a height of 4200m. 6-8 hours

Camp 1 (ABC) - Camp 2
Crossing the flat glacier we head up the face to the Skovorodka (Frying Pan!). This area is heavily crevassed so the group will be roped up to cross this terrain. The route progressively gets steeper until a traverse can be made to Camp 2 which is located on a rocky outcrop to the far right of the glacier at 5300m. 6-8 hours

Camp 2 - Camp 3
We ascend steeply above the camp to gain a ridge below Mt Razdelnaya. We follow this ridge to a small col at 6100m where we establish Camp 3. 4-6 hours

Summit Day
From Camp 3 we ascend along the Western ridge of Peak Lenin. The first part of the ridge can be mixed snow & rock. A rocky plateau is reached at 6400m (where it is possible to establish a Camp 4 if required). Above the plateau is a short steep snow slope of about 40 degrees which is normally fixed, this is followed by another rocky section which eventually leads to a pre-summit plateau. The route then drops before a final rise to the true summit at 7134m. 10 15 hours return time.

Day 19 Return to Base Camp
Clearing the mountain as we go, we head back down to base camp for a well earned rest.
